GOVERNORS TALK WITH MR. HARDING ON DRY LAW ISSUES

Mr. Parker Rejects Invitation to Attend Conference—Executives Complimented

chief executives of 16 states on prohibition enforcement following the fourteenth annual governors' confer-

Mr. Harding had originally intended to call a meeting in January on the subject, as many of the present governors will then be out of office, but the wisdom of hearing those who already have had experience in dealing with the problem is said to have brought him to the present step, although a later conference with the siderable time in presentation. Many governors who attended the the sole attack on the enforcement that he would be too busy with affairs in his own State, where he is making a fight against the Ku Klux Klan, to attend, but as he had also declared previously that he would not appear at the proposed January conference it would appear that he had other motives for desiring to absent himself.

Samuel Adams of Chicago, president of the Agricultural Editors' Associa-tion and connected with many farm journals, who attended the Governors' Conference at Sulphur Springs, has arrived in Washington to organize a 'League of Dry Republicans" with the object of taking active part in the presidential campaign of 1924, and in particular of seeing that a dry candidate is nominated.

TO INTERVENE IN EUROPE DOUBTED

Skepticism Shown in France Though It Is Admitted Some Hope Is Justified

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, Dec. 18-Much skepticism is shown in France at the volume of news from America. In all the accounts of American intentions to intervene in Europe, there is little that is tangible, or that bears careful examination. A loan, for example, cannot be raised at the present moment, whatever is said, since it must be dependent on a definite knowledge of Germany's liabilities. These liabilities are unknown, and so far as known are impossible. At the Quai d'Orsay it is stated that no communication, official or unoffi-cial has been made to the French Government. There is no belief in the alleged American scheme, although it is realized that doubtless negotiations are proceeding between the United States officials, and the possibility of American assistance in European difficulties is the engrossing subject of talk at Washington. It is thought strange, however, if these negotiations have gone far, that no in-formal statement has been conveyed to the Quai d'Orsay.

It is assumed, therefore, that at best, there is a new discussion about the American attitude, and that to entertain some hope that in the end America may decide on co-operation is justified. There is considerable in-terest taken in all the reports, but the attempt to carry things much further than they really are, is deprecated.

Change in French Attitude

Indeed one newspaper suggests that France may fall into a trap if it is not careful. Whenever it is on the point of acting vigorously there is a talk of America's return, of American assistance, in order that France should pause and not wreck the fresh

Certainly these suggestions from America have already contributed toward a remarkable change in the French attitude, as revealed in the virtual abandonment of the plans for the adventure ran high, and if it has fallen, it is partly because the mesthat "no one can be blind or inume."

The United States Government would not directly intervene"; there's much in-sistence on the point that if Germany obtained the money now for her own needs, there is no guarantee that she will pay France later on.

It is held that there is a positive danger to France in the plans if they result in building up a strong Ger-many at an early date without help-ing France. There is a belief that disarmament will figure on the American program, if the present propa-ganda should materialize. This would be distasteful to France at the ment and the convening of the Washington Conference would not be alto-gether welcomed. On the nationalists' side there is some pointed speaking.

Action Française plainly tells the United States that if she wishes to help, she has only one simple thing to do, namely cancelling the debts of its associates in the joint struggle. The Echo de Paris also says that America can best help by allowing France to seize the capital belonging to the German industrialists, which has been placed in America. This capital would suffice for two years' German pay have baffled European statesmen. The Times, while deprecating exaggerated optimism, says that the rumors of American intervention

European conditions. The Morning Post, also welcoming 'the obviously increasing interest" of the United States, thinks America "is peginning to recognize more clearly that sooner or later her own industrial prosperity must be affected by olitical and economic conditions of Europe.

The Daily News, although it does not regard American intervention for the present as more than a possibility, ays "it is highly probable that such intervention would change the whole course of events in Europe.'

In all the comment there is a clear eagerness to see intervention and there are many indications that this desire is based on a confident belief in the high American ideals.

A payment of tuition, whether directly to a private institution or to the scholar under such conditions that in effect it is a payment to the institution, would seem to achieve the forbidden result by indirection.

On the other hand, if the scholar-ship payment be made outright to the individual, without restriction, upon its use for tuition fees, in order to aid him in obtaining a college education, a different problem is presented.

British Control

In Cologne relative quiet dates from the time when the British military police took charge. People are still chuckling over a spectacle in the preceding period when one of the German policemen was industriously and successfully herding a fair-sized mob at the point of his drawn sword. Spying a British officer he stopped sheathed sword, saluted—as de-manded by occupation regulations and then with some difficulty at first strove sword in hand to make up for lost time and get his fugitives under control again.

Viewing the situation broadly the outstanding fact is not that there have been riots, but that there have not been more of them and worse ones. Despite occasional window breakings and street commotions, everybody goes about his or her business with-out a thought of danger or even interruption. If people had money to spend "business as usual" would un oubtedly be the order of the day, regardless of such so-called riots as have occurred, only in that case of course there might never have been

INDIAN GOVERNOR ON FAREWELL TOUR

Sir Harcourt Butler Makes Several Speeches Before Leaving the United Provinces

By Special Cable

CALCUTTA, Dec. 18-Sir Harcourt Butler, Governor of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, has been making a farewell tour of the provinces. At Agra, replying to an address of the Zamindars, he said he had always considered the landlords the backbone of the Province. This is perhaps true, but these same land-lords were described by the Governor in a speech delivered last year as fac-ing both ways—towards the Govern-ment and towards revolution, and who as a class hardly realized their re-sponsibilities till after the Chauri Chaura massacre.

Replying at a farewell banquet, or ganized by the Upper India Chamber of Commerce at Cawnpore, the Gov-ernor referred to the trade depression and to the business men's demand to be let alone. Sir Harcourt emphasized the fact that the depression was due to world conditions and also the relative smallness of the Indian public debt, adding that rashness was quite as possible in retrenchment as it was in expenditure. He expressed the pleasure that he had derived from his visits to the business centers at Cawnpore, probably the third biggest

All Kinds of Money Good Except That of Moscov Government—Occasional Outburst of Red Activity

By MORITZ DAVIDSOHN

TASHKENT, Nov. 14 (Special Correspondence)—It is a far cry to Tashkent. In an evil little steamer running from Baku to Krasnovodsk that had no idea of riding the waves at all, but tried to lie down for good in each trough; thence by exasperatingly slow train to Merv. The line beyond was insecure. Partisans of Enver Pasha, or Kazim Bey, or whoever it is who keeps intermittently alive the legend had been having a little game with the

A few miles of rails had boldly disappeared, and in all central Asia there were none to replace them. So, with that philosophy no man can fail to learn in the East, we packed ourselves on to the back of uncouth, longhaired dromedaries.

We saw no rebels. At least, we probably saw many, for all men are rebels here; but they did not inter-fere with us beyond taking an occasional pot shot at us, at long range. Thus to Samarkand, where the local Bolshevist Commissary had been depicted to me as a very ferocious individual, indeed. It was with trepi-dation that I looked him up. I found a small, comfortable, white-haifed man, with smiling lips, and a ridiculous little goatee beard, horn spectacles, and a trick of looking at you from over the top of them, that reminded me of an old master I once had at school. He proved to be as mild as he looked.

He gave me his benediction and several copies of the Sovietsky Vremia, a perfectly deplorable paper, all writ-ten and worse printed, with coarse blocks, smudged with sticky printers' ink. From this I learned that the combined armies of Soviet Russia and Turkey had utterly destroyed the entire Greek Army, the entire British Army, and were now looking around for fresh victims. However, as very few people in Samarkand can read at all, and of those who can, hardly any know a word of Russian, the Sovietsky Vremia is not likely to have a large reading public.

Sporadic Red Outbursts Nobody here seems to mind the Soviets very much. The greater part of the time the Reds lie low and say In the course of the farewell nothing, which in this turbulent land speech at the Legislative Council at of Turkestan, is the most sensible Lucknow, the Governor, discussing thing they could do. But there are, from time to time, sporadic outbursts. It may be that a big commissary from Moscow is expected on a tour of inspection. Or it may be that the local rale, and third-rate copies of the Moscow commissaries, think it about time they gathered in some money in lieu of long forgotten pay. Or perhaps some Red officers—save the word: swash-buckers is the better expression—have been celebrating some imaginary vic-tory in their usual noisy manner. O simply that it occurs to the Soviet the they had better remind the people the the Reds are still nominal rulers of the

CHINESE VISITOR LAUDS MASONRY

William Yinson Lee Calls the Order Great Force in Promoting World Confidence

That Freemasonry is one of the great forces binding together in mutual respect, confidence, and understanding the peoples of the world, and that the influence it exerts goes far beyond its actual membership, is asserted by William Yinson Lee, Chinese importer and merchant of Sydney, New South Wales, speaking from his intimate knowledge of conditions in China, Australia, and the United States. Mr. Lee is a business visitor in Boston and while here he is a guest of the Boston Masonic Club on Beacon

"Freemasonry is steadily and swiftly gaining in influence for good the world over," said Mr. Lee today to a representative of The Christian Science "The fundamental ideals of the fraternity such as the brotherhood of man, together with the essential working out of the Golden Rule in everyday life, are impressing men of China as never before.

Chinese for the most part, have not been attracted to Masonic lodges, working as they do under foreign jurisdictions, but recently many of my race have been initiated into the Blue Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts which is a striking proof of the good will between the Chinese and the Ameri-

Prominent in Masonry

Mr. Lee, who is a native of the Island Continent, although of Masonic parentage, is prominent in Masonry in Australia and entirely familiar with the growth of the fraternity in China, where business takes him frequently. He was raised in Southern Cross Lodge of the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of New South Wales in 1903 when he was but 18 years of age. His early initiation was made possi-ble through a special dispensation given by the Most Worshipful Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, Governor of New uth Wales and Grand Master of Masons. He will celebrate 20 years in Masonry next March.

Mr. Lee is Past Senior Warden of Andrew's Mark Lodge and also a Companion of the Royal Arch, which bodies are under separate jurisdic-tion in Australia as in England, Scotland and Ireland. Millions spent in publicity in China would not have done what these men have done to build up interna-tional feeling and understanding.

"The interchange of visits of mer-cantile and industrial commissions of China and the United States some years ago resulted in bringing the wo nations closer together in a commercial way. China has been the battleground of several wars in recent years which have shown the weak-ness of China in a military way. The Chinese people for many centuries have been taught from childhood to despise war and brute force. In these times, however, it is becoming-understood that it is necessary for China to be prepared in a military way against foreign aggression.

As Friend and Guide

"China has regarded the United States for many years not only as a friend but a guide, and President Harding's action in convening the Washington Conference showed the United States' interest in China's di-lemma. China had been exploited by foreign nations during the past 100 years, and it was not until the Washington Conference that China obtained recognition and justice. (These waitzes are fanciful, melodious little pieces, by the way; showing considerable inventive skill.) Mrs. de Horvath is among the most interesting of the planists who have appeared here so far this season. She plays understandingly and musically, and this is no small measure of praise. To her the piano is a means of expression, not a machine for the display of agility. She feels the music which she plays and does not hesitate to let her feelings be shown in her playing; yet she indulges in no mere riot, of uncontrolled sentimentality. Not every member of the Labor ring of truth and sincerity. It has been said that no man can make a name for himself in the House of Commons who has not the physical strength to impress the spoken word on his audience, and to stand the ceaseless rush and crush of competiive existence.

Mr. Clynes is an exception to this rule. He has made his way in spite of the fact that he cuts no great figure in debate and appears unsuited to a life of strenuous action. He has arrived by sheer force of character and intellect. He has never tried to adopt the rôle of the agitator in or der to attract attention. KINSELLA LEADS REID IN SERIES

World's Squash Tennis Champion Is Expected to Retain His Title Wednesday

NEW YORK, Dec. 18-That W. Kinsella, professional squash tennis champion of the world, will re-tain his title next Wednesday when he meets Jack Reid of the Crescent Athletic Club on the courts of the Yale Club in the second match of the best two out of three, is the opinion of those who watched the champion win three straight games when they met in the first of the series on the Yale Club courts Saturday, 15—5, 15—8, 15—10. Should Reid win Wednesday, the third and deciding match will take place Saturday.

Saturday's match was an exhibition of squash tennis that combined every fine point of the game, together with an invincible coolness that accounted for many critical points. The match was in charge of a special committee of the National Squash Tennis Association, headed by A. J. Cordier, former United States amateur cham-

This is the first time Kinsella has been called on to defend his championship since he won in 1914, from S. J. Feron. He said before the match that he had never been in better form, and his performance justified the statement. Reid also appeared in first-class form, and the match depended chiefly on the styles of play.

In addition to his speed shots, the champion developed a change of pace that played a large part in his ning points in the second and third games. He was also very skillful in driving to the front wall so that the would hit Reid on its return, though this was partly due to the somewhat awkward movements of the little challenger. Reid, on the other hand, relied chiefly on an up-and-down drive, which clung close to the side His court-covering was remarkable, saving many scores by remarkable gets. In the second game, he was especially brilliant, forcing the state of the remarkable wrist work of the remarkable wrist work of the remarkable wrist work. long rallies that ended in his favor, in spite of the remarkable wrist work of the champion

Kinsella won the toss, and made a run of five on alternate placements and drives out of court by Reid, be-fore losing service on a side-line drive The latter gradually gained on him, however, mostly on shots by the champion that landed in the telltale, largely due to the speed of Reid. finally steadied, and after several scoreless hands, finished out the game with another run, compiling 7 points in succession, 3 being placements, with Reid landing the other 4 in the telltale in his effort to prevent Kinsella from scoring on his angle

The champion took one more point before losing service at the start of the second game, and gradually worked his way ahead until he led at 8-2. The last two rallies were be-coming closer and more uncertain, as Reid exerted himself, and at this point the Crescent Athletic Club coach made his first real bid for the victory with s run of 6 perfect shots that went for placements, except where Kinsella managed to get his racquet on one that landed in the telltale. But it was direction, made up the additional 7 points needed for the game, with

Western Conference Votes to Enter National Collegiate Track and Field Games

Special from Monitor Bureau CHICAGO, Dec. 18-Prospects for the success of the National Collegiate Athletic Association track and field championships next June are better than ever today, according to Maj. J. L. Griffith, chairman of the meet committee, as a result of the battle to keep the "Big Ten" from going out in a body. General public interest and the active support of far-flung college groups was aroused by the attack on when the faculty committee of the Conference reversed its previous order, the games emerge stronger than before. With the help of T. E. Jones, athletic director of University of Wisconsin, a member of the national track committee. Major Griffith opposed nine members of the Intercollegiate Conference Association, including W. D. Howe, president, who were determined that the National meet should be either minimized, amalgamated or from Chicago, preferably

Boston or Los Angeles. After an all-day argument, the faculty rescinded its order of Dec. 2, recconduct of the meet be adopted so that it may afford the means of truly determining national individual championships, that only those athletes be admitted who have won points in a recognized Conference or Intercol-legiate track meet, and that a list of such meets be prepared and that the administration of the eligibility rules placed under the control of a faculty committee.

Speaking for the Conference alumni group, E. R. Johnston, graduate of National meet had a tendency to eliminate faculty control; that by paying expenses to contestants, the financial end tended toward professionalism and club competition; that it tends to break down rules of eligibility because miscellaneous colleges are admitted with lower standards than the "Big Ten"; that it prolongs the athletic season; that it is not a truly national meet and tends to injure Conference ideals, and that it is in the nature of post-season championship games which the Conference opposes in foot-was pointed out that the National meet jeopardizes the Western Conference meet, which the association has for years been trying to build up as the banner meet of the west, and that a number of outside institu-tions which have been induced to into the Conference meet will stay out now for the National. All played together last year with the B. A. A. J. M. Martin, last year's wing-man for Harvard, will make his first appearance in out-of-college hockey in the front line of this club. A. H. Bright, Joseph Stubbs, A. P. Doty and T. H. Rice, all defense men last year with iniversity of Iowa, asserted that the the Unicorn team, are out to help this team make a strong bid for championship honors.

The B. A. A. was successful in de-feating the Montreal Nationals, 3 to 0, in the second game of their visit here, at the Boston Arena. As in the game the previous night with the Victoria Hockey Club, the Canadians showed a decided lack of team play and re-sorted too much to individual attempts to win. The visitors' defense was un-able to cope with the passing game used by the Unicorns.

The first point came after less than three minutes, when A. G. Smith carried the puck down the ice and passed to W. W. Rice, who sent it past L. Gervais into the net. It was in G. L. The visitors attacked strongly all the time, but the local defense was hard to beat and Forbes, in particular was a riddle to the Ottawa attackers. He was out of the game last season but last night displayed all of his brilliant form of two years ago, and had it not been for the way he turned aside the attacks of the losers the ocals would have been defeated by a large margin. His playing was the greatest exhibition of goal tending that has ever been seen in this city. Corbeau, last year with the Canadiens and Reise, formed a good defense in front of him, while the veteran Prodgers was the best of the forwards. The game brought out the fact that the ocals will have to secure additional forwards if they are to remain in the championship race.

The visitors held the advantage during three quarters of the play but tired towards the end of the game and were weakened by several penalties in the third and overtime periods, when the locals scored the tieing and winning goals, playing six men against five.

Interest in the reorganized Hamilton to team has been increased this season and the game was witnessed by over 6000 spectators but the finished playing expected of professional players was lacking at times. Art Ross, who is coaching the locals, has devoted most of his time to perfecting combination and this style of play produced three of the four goals, Prodgers scoring one and making the passes for the other pair. The losers were the more finished team and their attacking division was considerably better than the local forward line, having more speed, better stick handling ability and better marksmanding ability and better marksmanding ability and better marksmanding ability and better marksmanding. This explicit declaration for "positive legislation" prohibiting slavery in the United States can only be construed as a pledge to destroy the institution of property in human beings, and that this was the intention of the convention is clearly shown by the speeches of prominent delegates. Happy London Chemist

London, Oct. 24 COMETHING, clearly, is too much for Bloomsbury, though it is hard to define just what it is. It may be the British Museum, or the boardhouses, or Gower Street, or perhaps the Hotel Russell; but whatever it is, in spite of some fine nouses and a dignified layout, (there are more squares here than in any other part of London) Bloomsbury is undeniably dull. Chelsea and Westminster, Hampstead and the Temple, all have the quality of charm in addition to their other characteristics. Blooms-bury is almost alone in lacking it al-most completely. There are exceptions, of course—the Foundling Hospital in Guildford Street, for instance, is enchanting, and there are friendly little houses in some of the smaller squares—but, speaking broadly, the prim respectability of the nineteenth present fixed on two fronts) Russell Square.

Sir John Burnett's Design

Erected a year or two ago from the designs of Sir John Burnett, R. A., at the corner of Russell Square and Keppel Street, it is exactly oppositeand not in position only-to the Hotel Over the door in Keppel treet it stands recorded that this is the "Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland." The words come almost as a shock, for few are Britain and Ireland." fortunate enough to be able to associate either institutes or chemistry with anything so delightful as this.

It is a true gentleman among build-ings-perfectly at home in its surroundings and making no attempt to outshine its neighbors. The design, in fact, is almost severe, carried out in brick of a color that harmonizes well with the tone of the adjacent houses and relieved only by a sparing use of Portland stone. Three brick arches The second link wit Portland stone. Three brick arches facing Russell Square and four others on Keppel Street are almost the only features, with the exception of the front door. But this door is one of the most original and successful in a pediment, in the center of which, and under a projecting stone canopy, is the statue of Joseph Priestley, the preacher and chemist. This statue, carried out in Portland stone, with most effective touches of gold on the buttons of the coat and on the cravat.

This unity between architecture and sculpture is not always achieved. Sometimes, as on the Victoria and Albert Museum, and Australia House in the Strand-to name but two London examples the figures seem rather adjuncts to the building than members of it. But in the Institute of Chemistry, Priestley, we feel, is an organic part of the design. And the unity here

Simplicity in the City

THE Institute of Chemistry on Russell Square, at the corner of Keppel Street, London, is a very satisfactory treatment for a three or four-story building on a city street. It has a good skyline, looking well from a distance on the street. It is sufficiently decorative on the façude of its first two stories, with its arcade and doorway and the sculpture over, to be pleasing to the passerby. It is the sort of reticent simplicity that stands the test of time. Such buildings are not, as a rule, the result of prize-winning competitions or brilliant overdrawn architectural designs, but show the strong hand of the

It is instructive, by the way, to compare the use of it here with the very different, but also most effective, treatment at the entrance to the Middlesex Guildhall in Westminster, which was noted and illustrated in a recent article.

In the first place, the house was three-fifths full, instead of crowded to an overflow of hundreds on the stage, as was the case when Heifetz first played here. Why the deple-tion? A little questionnaire seems to indicate a valid reason. Heifetz moves on and off the stage like an automaton. If he is glad to play, he gives no sign of it. The countenance is smileless, unrelaxing. Kreisler plays out of tune sometimes. But he is human and personal. An audience, though it dearly loves assurance in player or speaker, will forgive much to that quality we call personal appeal. It prefers that to display of inerrancy in technique.

One of the best-liked things of all was the "Waves of Play" of Edmund Grasse of New York, which races up and down the muted strings like a flurrying of wavelets. It had to be done again immediately, and was played just as well the second time. Two Pianists in Chicago

CHICAGO, Dec. 12 (Special Correspondence)—Two planists offered in-teresting programs at recitals Sun-day. Mischa Levitzki disclosed in his efforts that few living representatives of the piano-playing art are als supe-riors in technical finish or in the sanity with which they interpret music. He was admirable in the Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, by Bach, and in Sgambati's transcription of a melody from Gluck's "Orfeo" he accomplished a remarkable feat of what the reviewers of an earlier day called "cantilation." The piano, after all, is a brutal instrument, and he who can make it sing is more than a mere performer. Mr. Levitzki's negotiation of the Symphonic Studies by Schumann was so successful that it made a work, which ordinarily exacts patience from the listener, sound fascinating and inspired.

Of the early American sculptors the most important name is John Quincy Adams, creator of "The Indian Hunter," which stands in Central Park, New York. His equestrian statue of General Thomas in Washington, D. C., is today recognized as one of the best of its kind in the United States. In his statue of Henry Ward Beecher the sculptor reflected Early American sculptors, it was shown, were without spulptural traditions, many were of an humble class and the early settlers were prejudiced by ignorance, many of them believing that art was the work of evil. From this beginning and atmosphere emerged early American work. One of the first geniuses of record was Mrs. Patience Wright of Bordentown, N. J. MERICA lacks the artistic background and traditions to produce great work and, under conditions of modern life, it is impossible for a towering master to appear. The present desire to avoid work with the hands at once endangers art and democracy; and instead of thinking of art as something "pretty and superficial" it should be as a religion.

This was Lorado Taft's message to students who thronged Fullerton hall in the Art Institute to hear the sculptor's recent lecture on American sculpture. Absence of Mr. Taft who was attending an important meeting in Washington, D. C., did not prevent the message being given. His daughter, Miss Mary Taft, read the matuscript, and explained the slides and showed some of the work of her father.

STEEL TRADE'S PROSPECTS FOR 1923 ARE BRIGHT

Capacity at Beginning of New Year Will Be 80 Per Cent Against 30, Jan. 1, 1922

NEW YORK, Dec. 18 (Special)— Steel makers say that the new year is approaching with bright prospects for the steel industry. The industry will be working nearly 80 per cent when 1923 is ushered in, compared with about 30 per cent a year ago.

There has been an unsuaul amount of inquiry the last few days for future delivery. Moreover the buying has been diversified, which indicates a fundamentally good condition. For instance, in steel bars, one of the most representative items, the demand has been most varied. One New York sales office sold bars in huge quantities to steel jobbers, makers of automobile manufacturers of conveying machinery, drop forgers, and makers of bolts and nuts. Many of the orders were unexpected because of the belief that consumers were well covered.

Other Potential Orders

The railroads will continue to buy freight cars and locomotives because there is yet a shortage. Building expansion will continue, and this will take large quantities of structural steel, nails, cast iron pipe, metal lath and hardware. During 1922 there and motor trucks, as compared with 2.250,000 in 1920, the former record, and automobile makers are now producing at the rate of 3,000,000 annu-Although this business may slow up somewhat next year, the great momentum gained will carry it for-

The great depression of 1921 was carried through the first quarter of this year, and it is logical for the present normal period to last many months before another reaction sets in. The industry weathered all storms railroad embargoes, car shortage, labor scarcity, and loss of a large share of export business, and will tedly safely pass through any trials of 1923.

Prices Appear Stable

Steel prices continue stable. Coke, iron, and steel scrap, semi-finished steel and finished steel are practiunchanged. Pig iron was lowin the Pittsburgh district last $1 a ton for malleable and $2.50 for Bessemer. One maker of boiler tubes advanced prices about $10 a

That buyers believe that the bottom of the pig fron market has been reached is indicated by the heavy purchasing of the last fortnight and by the inquiry for delivery through the first helf of 1822 the first half of 1923.

In the keen competition for the large tonnages pending some furnaces were willing to cut the market $1 a but after the first buying subsided prices snapped back to original levels. For instance, eastern Pennsylvania iron was sold at $26, furnace the price returning to $27. Buffalo furnaces took the bulk of the business in the east at $25 or less, with one big maker advancing prices to $26 after he had booked about 100,-Birmingham iron fell to $21, but recovered to $23.

New Competition

Buffalo furnaces will meet severer etition for New England business than ever when the new furnace of Witherbee, Sherman & Co. at Port Henry, N. Y., is in blast with a capacity of 500 tons a day. This furnace will probably blow in during April and the present furnace which is being repaired, with a capacity of 250 tons daily, will probably resume late in February. Freight rates are less into New England than from any iron producing center.

For the first time since February the unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation declined during November by 62,045 tons. The decline was due to both falling off of new orders and to better transportation which allowed the shipment of much accumulated finished steel at the mills, British iron and steel exports con-tinue to gain. In November they totaled 372,000 tons as compared 347,000 tons in October and 194,000 tons in November a year ago. Figures for November exports for the United States have not yet been made public, although October exports showed a slight gain for the first time since June. American rail makers continue to lose rail business for the Far East to German mills, 15,000 tons having thus been lost lately, whereas, previously this year American mills secured all this business. For the first time this year finished steel products are invading the United States from abroad. For instance, Belgian bars, hoops, and bands were sold last week in the New York district, the bars at 20 cents a 100 pounds less than the American price and the hoops and bands at 35 cents less than the domestic quotation.

American copper consump tion is unusually heavy, the American Brass Company, for instance, now operating at 100 per cent of capacity.

Export Copper Higher During last week the export copper price rose from 14.20 cents c. i. f. European port, to 14½ cents. The once enormous stocks of brass and copper scrap, a heritage of the war are virtually consumed and virgin metal must be used in the future.

November production of copper in the United States was about 158,000,-000 pounds, compared with shipments of 155,000,000 pounds. Inasmuch as copper producers are lowering their production costs continuously and the selling price is rising, a genuine era of prosperity is being ushered into the industry for the first time since the

The tin market closed the week at 37½ cents a pound for the Straits grade. Business was quiet all the week, and prices were fairly stable. American consumers are evidently awaiting greater stability on the part of sterling exchange and the placing of the London market on a price basis of supply and demand rather than speculation. Americans doubtless be-lieve that the British tin price is too high, but the British reply that other metal prices are higher and so tin is justified in rising.

EGYPT'S COTTON CROP MAY BE RATHER LIGHT

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (By Mail)-Similar tactics to those of last year are being used this season in regard to the Egyptian cotton crop whereby an incorrect impression is circulated during the last year, including strikes, in regard to the yield in order to bring about high prices if possible. Last season instead of a crop officially estimated at 3,400,000 cantars (cantar practically 100 pounds) the actual yield was found to be about 5,000,000. This year the reports have been very pessimistic.

It is true that picking yields have been, on the whole, somewhat disap-pointing, probably as a result of the extremely hot summer, which caused many of the early bolls to open prematurely, but previously it had been considered that hot weather was favorable to the crop, because early cotton escapes largely other ravages. It is likely that the 1922 crop will e a light one, but there is no reason to think that it will be as small as might be gathered from some sources. The project for advancing cash up to £4 per cantar (the present market price is nearly £61/2 per cantar, or about 25 per cent higher than the prewar price) appears to be taking form the arrangement being that two banks should be empowered to dispense loans under Government guarantee, the cotton itself being mortgaged as security to the Government. Meanwhile, there appears to be a considerable amount of buying and many growers are selling to local merchants at very fair prices. It is fairly possible that, as in the past, the Government engagements on this account will not be large.

DE BEERS ARE STRONG FEATURE OF LONDON LIST

LONDON, Dec. 18-De Beers Mines were strong features of the stock exchange here today, following the announcement of the payment of the back dividend of 30 per cent on the preference shares.

Textile descriptions were leaders in the industrial department, which displayed buoyancy in spots. Hudson's Bay was 711-16. Support from the provinces stiffened home rails. Argentine rails also improved on a demand from investors.

Dollar issues were quiet around previous levels. The gilt-edged list was firm, with a tendency to gain ground.

French loans displayed strength. The oil group was cheerful, having been oversold, Royal Dutch was 32%, Shell Transport 43-16, and Mexican Eagle, 2%.

Kaffirs were well maintained, but dealings were professional. Stability in the crude article helped rubbers. Generally sentiment was optimistic. but the approach of Christmas holidays checked business.

ERBERT COPLIN COX, president and general manager of the Canada Life Assurance Company, is one of the foremost financial men of the Dominion. He is a native of Peterborough, Ont., son of the late Senator George A. Cox, who was an outstanding figure in Canadian public affairs and financial circles of hiseday. The Senator was one of the early agents of the Canada Life Company, and rose to be president.

In 1894, Herbert C. Cox became manager of the Eastern Ontario &

The New York company will take over the 10,000 shares of stock of the present corporation there, and issue instead 100,000 shares of no par value. Of these 50,000 have been sold, giving the company about $2,500,000 of new capital. The buyers of this block will put 25,000 shares on the market. After a few weeks they will be listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Chino advanced 1% and large fractional gains were recorded by Anaconda, Ray Consolidated, Granby, and Inspiration.

In the oil group there was a moderate inquiry for Middle States, General Asphalt, Shell Transport, Royal Dutch and Sinclair.

Stromberg Carburetor established a new peak price as did Fisher Body, which touched 214, up 2%. Other strong spots were Gulf States Steel, Sears Roebuck, and Kelsey Wheel.
Rails were sluggish, Union Pacific and St. Paul preferred yielding fractionally. New York Central and Northern Pacific each advanced %. S. M. Vauclain, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, says the United States has reached the limit of its transportation facilities, and lays the present crisis to "politicians who know nothing about transportation." He said thousands of cars are already loaded in Pittsburgh awaiting locomotives to haul them. BALTIMORE awaiting locomotives to haul them. Lord Aberconway, in a letter to the London Times, advocates that the English debt funding commission which will soon go to the United States, attempt to fund only England's direct debt, leaving the indirect indeftedness incurred on behalf of the other Allies until the whole question of the inter-allied debt is settled. Dr. Jones told a representative of The Christian Science Monitor that the schools were as crude as possible.
"In most places they had only the first and second grades. In the whole country there are only six or seven high schools which really correspond to grammar schools in the United States, and there is no university Some of the places I visited affected me greatly. I went to one little village on the top of a mountain. The head or chief of the village, who is similar to an Indian tribal chieftain, met me; he was in rags. Asked as to whether any gradual transfer or "weaning" from phonoscript to ordinary script was necessary, he replied, "No, because all phonoscript letters are easy to write and words are always written with their proper spelling." It was wonderful to hear tiny mites of five years spelling and pronouncing without hesitation words like photograph, patience, gelatine, hassock, handicraft. It is claimed that the system eliminates from the school the deliberately tiresome child who aims at upsetting the class, and that it ends the battle between the will of the teacher and that of the pupil.

If the pupil is no longer guided by the teacher, what takes the place of this guidance? Does he simply follow his own free will, and if so, will this not leave him a prey to lawlessness and self-will, and lawlessness is the great moral difficulty of the age.

A superficial observer of the Dalton system may believe that it does not entail sufficient discipline. The Dalton system, however, affords training in self-reliance and in co-operation. The system offers to the children what a free state offers to its people, namely, the opportunity to learn by experience. that the numbers are likely to increase, rather than diminish in the future. The report is wholly sympathetic toward the needs and aspirations of the students, and shows a desire on the part of the committee to understand their points of view.

Several reasons are given for the fact that so many Indian students go to Great Britain for education. In the first place, an Indian educated in England has a better chance of securing employment in India, especially in the Indian public services, than one who obtains the whole of his education in India. Secondly, educational facilities in India are considered inferior and inadequate as compared with those available in the United Kingdom. An important consideration is the fact that it is only in England a man can be called, to the bar.

The committee find also that the assistance rendered is scurring facilities for practical training is in some cases inadequate. There may also operation with the universities. Airplane Performance,

Past and Present

THE recording of airplane performance had its beginning on Dec. 17, 1903, when the Wright brothers' biplane was given its first successful trial at Kitty Hawk, N. C., and the anniversary of that historic feat offers a peculiarly favorable opportunity for the making of a survey

Some stages of the progress have been more rapid than others, but there has been less variation in the rate of advance than is sometimes supposed. There have been intervals when aviation seemed to be in the doldrums in the United States, and most of the European countries have creases had to wait for the coming of similarly passed through periods of the supercharger. With that accesquiet, but the quietness has usually been induced by a temporary change of Government policy and by a failure to stand behind research and development work with that degree of governmental support which is necessary to insure the maximum rapidity of progress in the pioneering stages, and while one country was quiet others have been going ahead. Certainly 1914 and 1918, and since the armistice the development of flying craft

It is usual to express the performance of a particular airplane, or to define the status of the art of airplane design at a given time, by citation of the records for speed, for better are the chances of making a altitude, and for distance or duration without stop. A study of the subject of this article may perhaps best be made by tracing the advance of those length of time that an airplane can three records in turn and by exam- stay off the ground, and it is governed ining briefly into the means by which the various improvements in the the ratio of weight of the empty airrecords have been made.

was several years after the first flight before there was material advance over that figure. The first international airplane race was held in August, 1909, and was won by Glenn H. Curtiss, founder of the company which this year built the Curtiss army racer for the Detroit competitions, on biplane of his own design and at an average speed of 47 miles an hour. The mile-a-minute figure was reached the next year, and from that time the was rapid, as the real importance of "streamlining" to reduce resistance began to be realized. Ninety-miles an har was attained in 1911, two miles a minute in 1913. During the war there was little increase in absolute maximum speeds, but high speed was combined with controlability and easy landing, so that what had once been hazardous even for ex-perienced racing pilots became comonplace for beginners. At the present time the machines used for the carrying the pilot alone, but the first stages of training are capable of speeds higher than the maximum that could be attained by the winner of the Gordon Bennett race, then representative of the international speed championship, a dozen years ago.

The war over, engineers and pilots a vast accumulation of data from Government laboratories for the improvement of their designs, they were able to step the speed up immediately to the neighborhood of three miles a minute. The record has changed hands nearly a score of times in three years, usually pushed ahead a mile or so at a time, usually held by a French machine. Two hundred miles an hour was reached about a year ago, and 211 was the mark which stood on the books this fall up to the time when the RAND STRIKES Curtiss army racer was brought forth at Detroit. The story of the performances there, when the official record was pushed up to 225 miles an hour the largest single advance that had been made in three years, is too well known to need repetition. Let it suffice to note, as a single measure of the scale of progress, that the maximum speed recorded as having been made by an airplane is now 41/2 times as great as it was at the time of the Rheims meet of 1909.

Limitations of space forbid any technical analysis of the means by which increased speeds have been se-cured. In summary, however, they may be attributed to increased attencreased utilization of the results of heaval. research. Constant "cleaning up" of the structure, elimination of the exposed parts which offered resistance and which were not necessary to the strength of the airplane, has brought its reward, as has the study in the aeronautical laboratory of the relative merits of wings and bodies of various forms and the immediate application of laboratory results to It showed the extreme danger to of the Russian rubles of 1923. iesign. The power plant has also been of great importance, an importance suggested by the increase in the power The first airplane flown by the Wrights had only 12 horsepower. Cur- fashion. times. The pilots stayed close to their landing fields and they saw no reason to get far above the earth. Altitude records finally began to be kept, however, and at the Rheims meet of 1909, the same one where Curtiss won the first Gordon Bennett race, Latham startled the world by climbing to an altitude of 490 feet. No pilot would now think of starting on even the most modest cross-country trip over the best of country at so modest a height. Within another year 6000 feet was reached, and 10,000 had been passed before the beginning of 1911. was doubled again before the war, and soon raised to 30,000. Further insory, which holds the engine power constant at all altitudes, 40,000 feet, more than 71/2 miles, has been attained. The ratio of increase in maximum altitude in 13 years is almost fantastic, the present record, held by Lieutenant MacReady, being more than 80 times as high as that established at the first Rheims meet.

Aside from the effect of the superthere was no cessation of aeronauti- charger, already mentioned, increas-cal development anywhere between ing the altitude has been largely a matter of cutting down weight and increasing power. Aerodynamic effi-ciency and the reduction of strucfor the purposes of commerce and of tural resistance have some influence, to be sure, but altitude is primarily a matter of the weight carried per square foot of wing surface and per horsepower, and the lighter the engine used and the higher its power, in the discussion, for there is no feature of flight which takes a more forcible hold on the imagination than does the sheer velocity attained. It is only a few years, however, since only 59 seconds and covered a little the speeds made were very moderate less than 300 yards against a head even by racing automobile and locomotive standards. Only since the visited France and astounded the war has the maximum speed in the Europeans, previously skeptical of his air surpassed that of the fastest reported achievements, by making a earthbound vehicle, but there is no flight lasting two hours and 20 minutes. South African shares. Surely those men, small capitalists, were just as much entitled to protection as any other portion of the public. It was absolutely untrue that the Chamber of Mines, or any other industry had any more influence with the Government than any other section of the population.

As a result of the falling off in trade and the depression which existed, there was a corresponding falling off in revenue. The Administration and the general manager of railways had been able to introduce extensive omies. Fewer trains were running at the present time, supplies were cheaper and there had been a certain amount of retrenchment. The expenditure during the past six months had been reduced by £127,000. On the railways today there was a deficit of £2,300,000. The Government had to pay its way and could not go on piling up debt for which there was absolutely nothing to show.

Taxation had been increased since 1914 by £7,500,000, and yet the deficit would be about £1,000,000. In order to relieve the strain of unemployment, the Government was trying to utilize all the white labor they could. They employed white labor in railway construction work and he believed it would help these people to make good. Unfortunately, in South Africa, they were too apt to measure labor by the unskilled labor of the kaffir. What the kaffir did was looked upon as the amount any unskilled man ought to do. With better organization and superior intelligence the white unskilled laborer should be able to do much more. On that basis they were going to try and work.

With regard to the development of Table Bay Mr. Jagger stated that he had appointed a commission for the purpose of going into the question and seeing what could be done, and for the purpose of formulating a comprehensive policy for years to come. The plan, which had been drawn up Expression must not only have the very timidness and hesitancy of something to say, but someone to say it to. All of which seems quite true.

I had been chatting with a friend, the art editor of one of the magazines, in his office, and my call had been lengthening as I compared the warm comfort of his room with the savage drive of the season's first snowstorm beating against the windows and almost shutting from sight the avenue far below, where the street cars and tried to describe this almost imautomobiles were forcing their way against the blasts with bowed heads, were, and shrugged shoulders. telephone calls and applicant artists, a political job dispenser. Withal there was something thoughtfully grave as of a hermit philosopher, and something elfishly content, as of a puck. He seemed a Rip Van Winkle returning with secrets more real than tall buildings and motor cars.

He had some drawings, he said, in a voice which itself had puzzling, indefinable quality. It was clear, sweet-toned yet reticently faint like the echo of a distant song. Might he show them to me? I nodded and he untied ing his package with fingers which moved with surprising delicacy to their task. Then he began to lay the drawings on the table, turning them over one by one.

Then he went on to tell me some thing of himself. He had lived in thing of himself. He had lived in the distribution of art school student, or some commerart school student, or some commercial artist with flowing tie to denote his trade, and a brisk grip of the hand to prove his earnestness. Therefore my prepared phrases faded from my lips as there arose from a chair in the corner an immensely tall figure, which instantly suggested the gauntness of Barnard's Lincoln. As he stepped under the light the likeness faded. The clothes hung loosely from the broad shoulders. There was an awkwardness of movement. The hands were large, big fingered, the hands of anyone.

HE megaphone calls alluringly from the lower cottage, "Should you like to climb, this morning, to "The Gate of Heaven'?" Should we indeed! A Sabbath day in the mountains is not so frequent a privilege that enthusiasm soon grows laggard. The voice only adds friendly zest to our enjoyment of the peace and beauty of the morning, as we sit at breakfast before the open door; and we shout back our pleasure through the intervening treetops that screen the lower cottage from the upper one. Within an hour, mountain-booted, with staff in hand, we are standing on our porch steps, ready for the ascent. The hills and all the little living things are bright in the mellow autumn sunshine. A fly, with an emerald body, a sapphire head, and gauze wings of iridescent loveliness, is sunning himself on the bannister; and a blue jay that pays us a daily morning visit, alights tree before us. Presently, we catch a glimpse of our hostess—the owner of the two cottages-and the educator-lady who is also visiting her, toiling slowly up the steep path that connects the cottages; and we step down to join them.

The mountain rises steep behind the plaster-chinked log cottages, and we can-not see the top for the forest of hemlock and spruce and pine. Our way zigzags through the trees. Here, we pluck a quivering aspen branch, turned gold by autumn's alchemy; and there, is a rich mahogany-colored seed-stock of the orchis family standing straight and aloof in its autumn garb. The educator explains that these plants are very rare in this region; we have seen but two of the kind.

Presently we turn about and rest upon our mountain staffs, to gaze upon what we have left behind. The valley has flattened and diminished. Those discreet cottages have grown more neighborly; their chimney stacks stand side by side. The creek is a twisted line; and the village—a few houses, a station, a general store, and a tungsten mill—is the hill's necklace of veather-grayed beads, strung on the rambling, dun-colored road. Beyond, on the distant range, the "Moffat Road" lengthens, climbing toward the crest of the continent Half-way up the side of the mountain, a double-header freight train of empty ore cars laboriously creeps on its sinuous

Gladdened and refreshed with the beauty which lies at our feet, we turn to resume our climb for the grander view. On and on we climb, with the slow, steady stride of the climber who loyes his mountains. Sometimes we help one another over an especially brave boulder; but we are usually independent, relishing a difficulty which challenges our best effort. Here we stop to pick up a rock of shining whiteness, to which the educator attaches a Latin name; or, there a flece of red granite, mica specked, and decked with clinging gray-green moss; or a gray stone, covefed with moss of fluted black. Under a group of young aspens, in a sunny spot, spreads a bed of kinnikinic. The berries have turned ed; and, yonder is a patch of white-berried and pause before its gay, uplifted truit to recall those strands of rose-bead necklaces we delighted in, when we were children. Then we pluck a few pungent, purple berries from a juniper shrub, to munch as we go along.

Again and again, we pause to look back,

Then, suddenly, we look up; and, surprised, we look out through a gap in the rocks upon a higher mountain range, rising, deep velvet green, beyond an unsuspected valley. The high sun, burn-ing down directly upon the distant firs, sketches the dless colonnades of thering shafts. Every way we turn, spread new lights and shades of varied colgs; prodigal nearer green, far-away blue mountains crowned with snowy whiteness, and interven-

The man claims the privilege of providing the firewood. She waves him aside. We shall see that an educator can cook a dinner as well as expound a logarithm.

For another hour in the gracious sunshine we wander over the mountainside, gathering brilliant aspen branches—they are gayer our city home. When we have at last descended to the upper cottage, the megaphonic voice announce with all the dignity of happy service, that dinner is ready, and we hasten down to find a laden table, set on the porch of the lower cottage, where tall grasses and hare-bells nod to us, a spring of icy water gur-gles at one side, a hundred aspens whisper joyfully, and chipmunks, gophers and squirrels, friendly little neighbors, come up to beg a crumb.

The sun slips down toward the high skyline. Along the rocky path we stop to gather the season's last offering of dark bell-gentian, pause on the tiny bridge to took into the pebbly-bottomed stream, and reach the station just as the train stops on its steam-less down-grade slide from the "Top o' the World."

As we emerge from the twenty-eighth and last tunnel, and twist out on to the dun plains, the city lies before us, gold-domed and haze-enwreathed in the lingering light. The sun, from behind the mountains we are leaving, is sending out a marvelous afterglow; massed clouds, pierced through with rays and transmuted by them into glowing ruby and topaz

Virgil as Laureate

BY BIRTH, by education, by temperament, Virgil stands out from all other Augustan poets as the predestined faureate of Augustus and his policy. He expresses that policy with unerring tact and felicity, but transcends it, as the work of the great poet must always transcend that of the statesman.

Virgil was a country boy. We catch glimpses of him amid the luxurious salons of the capital, but as the inspired rustic, timid, silent, ill at ease. He remained to the last, as Macrobius tells us, a Venetian of peasant parentage, reared amid the forests and the underbrush. But by virtue of this very sim-plicity he could and did enter into complete sympathy with the Italian policy of Augustus. This policy found in the Italian countryside with its unending toil its simple faith, its hardy, virtues, the symbo of all that was best in the Italian patrimony, which the statesman would have the rising generation, just on the threshold of a new world, claim as its birthright. Never has a poet given higher expression to that more poignant and simpler aspect of patriotism which draws its sustenance from the very breast of the land that bore it, and broods upon the austere face of the mother of men. The Georgics give us the breath of Italy, not of Rome. The Georgics are the final expression of the hold of the Italian country upon the souls of her people, upon the souls of all those pilgrims who have looked upward from the rivers and valleys of Italy toward her immemorial towns upon their hills:

adde tot egregias urbes operumque laborem; tot consesta manu praeruptis oppida saxis; fluminaque antiquos subter labentia muros.

In the Æneid Virgil has given us an epic which is at once historical, Augustan, religious, and su-premely human. The Æneid is an historical epic because in a very real sense its subject is the great-ness of Rome.—George Converse Fiske, in "University of Wisconsin Studies."

Becket at Canterbury strayed into the little village to rest. The pilgrims of that day comprised all sorts and conditions of people, many of them very willing to combine a little merriment and pleasure with their religious journey, as the records of many spitable inns or Pilgrim's hostels bear witness.

Guildford is a storehouse of antiquity, many of old buildings are full of interest and the presentday owners have the good sense to strengthen these lovely old buildings but to refrain from trying to improve on the days when a builder was a carver and an artist as well. A casual view down a narrow lane leading to the river, or a glance from the back windows of a house in the High Street usually dis-closes a delightful glimpse of timbered and plaster houses with tiny leaded windows.

The Town Hall with its far projecting clock and overhanging Council Chamber is a delightful building to explore, containing many things to interest the visitor such as the old standard weights and measures dated 1601, two fine portraits by Lely of Charles II and James II, and a reputed Van Dyck. The Town plate is especially valuable and includes two maces, one, an old war mace, is considered the third oldest in England and bears the date 1446, and is decorated with the three Prince of Wales feathers. and the three lions rampant at intervals. The Mayor's staff of ebony and silver was presented by Queen Elizabeth, who seems to have taken a great interest in Guildford and tried to protect and further the cloth industry for which the little Surrey town was famous.

In Holland

Like coloured checker boards the tulips bright Spread in Holland; Black and gold, blue, red and white Spring in Holland.

And rows of little trees beside the streams Leaning lightly, Whisper their reflected dreams, Sighing softly.

Neath skies of lavender and pale blue gauze, Vells of Summer, Scent is wafted on the breeze,

And maidens in their ample petticoats Dance in Holland:
Sing and dance to distant notes
Songs of Holland.

Good Manners Are Guides

Manners are the shadows of virtues; the momentary display of those qualities which our fellow-creatures love and respect. If we strive to become, then, what we strive to appear, manners may often be rendered useful guides to the performance of our duties.—Sidney Smith. duties.-Sidney Smith.

"Yea, He Is Altogether Lovely"

S HAS never been done since the comme of the Christian era, men, women, and children are now learning to understand the humanity of Jesus of Nazareth. New lights are constantly aring which reveal, not only the divinity of the Christ which Jesus presented, but also the grandeur and beauty of the Master's unparalleled humanity. Through Christian Science, more than through any other teaching, thousands are learning about the true character and teachings of Jesus, and to esteem all that they learn. Where formerly some thinkers looked askance upon his teachings, with much doubt concerning the possible effect of their full acceptance upon human lives and destinies, today greater num bers are opening their hearts and minds with unmeasured welcome to the teachings of Jesus, because, in the light of Christian Science, these are found practical and satisfying, found to be pearls above price, and the means of great joy.

As the teacher and friend of humanity, Jesus is today more loved and honored than ever before; for the message which came through him, and the life which he lived, are found beautiful and strong beyond comparison. Jesus manifested the Christ in all "the beauty of holiness,"-in all sweetness, gentleness, strength, and wisdom. He fulfilled perfectly the delineation which Solomon wrote into his Song: "His mouth is most sweet: yea, he is together lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem." In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 199) Mrs. Eddy writes: "We learn somewhat of the qualities of the divine Mind through the human Jesus. The power of this transcendent goodness is manifest in the control it gave him over the qualities opposed to Spirit which mortals name matter."

Christian Science explains the grandeur and power of the humanity of Jesus by explaining the nature of the Christ, the Son of God, which animated the man who appeared among men as the Savior of mankind. So, if the student of the Bible who is learning about Christ as the spiritual idea of God. through Christian Science, watches well in reading the Master's words and the records of his life-work, he will be constantly refreshed by ideals of humanity perfectly suited for application in the present time. it will be seen that Jesus' human career was one continuous illustration of what the real qualities are, teaching all who will learn how to overcome the qualities opposed to humanity's well-being.

How true it is that the unlimited power manifested through Jesus, which enabled him to override and destroy every so-called law of matter, was coincident with a character always tender, gentle. sympathetic, forgiving, and compassionate, always humane. These qualities of divine Mind, which Jesus illustrated, healed the sick, stopped the sinner's self-deception, raised the dead. Can it be held by anyone that these works were not most highly pra-Has humanity, battling with sin, ignorance, and fear, any greater need than that these marvelous works be again done, as Jesus promised?

What humane thoughtfulness the Master exhibited! After bringing the little daughter of Jairus back to life, "he commanded to give her meat." Although he had given the little maid more abundant life than she had ever known before, Jesus did not overlook the human need. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 25); "The divinity of the Christ was made manifest in the humanity of Jesus.'

In contemplating the character of the human Jesus, it is well to remember that before the advent of Christian Science the world's estimate of it was very ambiguous. Theological theorizing had distorted the meaning of the true manhood of Jesus, misrepresenting its qualities and significance; while non-Christians, in their ignorance, had constantly reechoed the scoffs and scorn of Golgotha. Is it, then, strange that the greatness of the Master's humanity has been glimpsed by but comparatively few?

Today, however, seen "through the lens of Christian Science" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 299) the character of Jesus illustrates all that is noble, pure, just, wise, lovable, and intelligent,-a perfect humanity; and Jesus taught that every man, woman, and child who accepts his teachings has, and can use, the same qualities which made him the model for all humanitarians. The hope of mankind for peace on earth will be realized by understanding, through Christian Science, the humanity of Jesus, a humanity dependent upon, his knowledge of the Christ, which radiated throughout his entire life on earth.

"Gil Blas" in Central America

THERS were upon the camino before usmule-trains, soft-eyed women and girls upon horses and mules, accompanied either by their lords and masters or by respectful mozos who frowned upon the passers-by who, like Norm, stared too long at the fair riders. Sturdy women of the peon class, their brighthued mantillas serving more the purpose of head-pad than hood, swung along with that graceful carriage that comes from bearing head-burdens, or perched upon the top of huge packs surmounting ancient caballos or tiny mules. 'As we moved over the brown, hard road at a steady, mile-eating pace, with the jays squalling at us from roadside trees, watching this busy road before us, I thought of Kim and his lama, following roads of Iudia; knew the urge that keeps the wanderer on the trail.

Many times before I had felt the yearning to follow unknown roads through new countries, the vague, yet powerful emotion that comes with hearing the wild goose cry, but never before had it seemed to be so definite a thing. I could analyse. dissect it-almost, that marvellous morning.

So we went on toward the mountains that loomed against the northern sky, the nearer peaks sharply outlined against the clear blue, with wisps of sno cloud floating lazily about the summits, while far-ther ranges piled shoulder after shoulder in hazy, lavender masses in the far distance, until sky and untain-crest become one, indistinguishable.

As we went we stepped into the footprints of this procession that might have walked from the pages of my old Gil Blas, swarthy, red-petticoated women and all. Up one incline and down the next, so ran the trail, for we had reached the foothills. Eight o'clock saw us approaching Santamicion, a half-dozen pole-walled, palm-thatched huts drowsing life away beside the highway. At a roadside bakery of the village we halted to buy bananas, guineas, she called them—and dry, flour-meal cakes from a strapping, coquettish woman. Then we marched on, eat-

At noon we turned into the yard of the Hacienda San Francisco, a large cattle-ranch, and sat down upon a verandah edge to watch the women in the ouse. They were baking tortillas on wholesale scale, and as the flat cakes came out of the kitchen two mozos piled them in an ox-cart. We saw the cart go creaking off toward the distant potreros, laden with the tortillas to the height of four feet above the side-boards, the "chuck-wagon" of the hacienda, carrying supplies to men at work on the distant ranges. As we sat in the shade of the verandah the foreman trotted up on a great bay mule, and of him we asked breakfast. The Spanish word for "gentleman," caballero, when literally translated means "a man on a horse." The inference is that gentlemen never walk. We were afoot, therefore we could not be gentlemen. So ran the foreman's ratiocination. Bueno! To the cookhouse he sent us to eat with the peones. meal was good and the woman who served us both cleanly and courteous, so when we couldn't prevail upon the foreman to accept pay for the food we presented the cook with a half-peso and went on. We were as content as if we had been invited to join the company we could see through an open window, gathered about the snowy table in the big house.—Eugene Cunningham, in "Gypsying Through Central America."

Working Ways

The morning was gray with rain. There might have been nothing but rain in all the world as I mounted my bicycle and set off for the day's work. Sky, trees, houses and road, all were merged into the same prevailing tone, and for the moment the prospect of my daily round assumed the same hue.

Through the gray curtain ahead loomed a vague shape, soon resolving itself into the figure of a fellow-traveler, bending low over the handles of his bicycle. His back was towards me, but over the corner of the sack which protected his shoulders 1 caught a glimpse of something which quickened my What could he be carrying in that basket in front of him that glowed and sparkled like bright jewels? I drew nearer, and saw, and understood.

His basket was packed with tender young carrots and sweet peas-coral, apricot; pink, and deepest crimson. The colors shone through the soft gray rain with opalescent radiance. It was his humble contribution to the world's need, of usefulness and

When at last our ways diverged the aspect of that day was changed for me. Work, and the daily round took on a brighter significance. I saw the rain and the gray mist as the perfect setting for that jewel-like offering, the beautiful fruit of patient, honest

Knut Hamsun's Humor

TAMSUN'S humor is all-pervasive; it is the yeast that lightens his load When Albert Engstrom, the Swedish humorist, ended an appreciation of Hamsun by saying, "And finally I love you for the gleam in your left eye," he found an apt expression for the personality that shines through Hamsun's works. His wit has less of wit than of comicality, less of the laugh than the smile with a gleam in his eye; and he is as ready to smile at his own intensities as at the weaknesses of humanity.- His flights of fancy are tempered with irony, his real reverence with a playfulness that often takes the guise of impish irreverence. He loves the far-flung paradox and the sudden transitions of thought by which he astonishes his readers.

The quality of unexpectedness in his thought is well stimulated in the style he has evolved for him-self. This style was fully developed when Hamsun made his first appearance as an author, a fact which adds interest to Sigurd Hoel's opinion that the dash and brilliance of "Hunger" was due to American in-fluence. Certainly Hamsun has never improved upon this style, and it may even be questioned whether its manner with the light staccate touch, the prevalence of interjections and sentences consisting sometimes of a single word, has not in some of his later works hardened into a mannerism that results in a slight veariness of repetition. Taken as a whole, however. his style has been a bath of rejuvenation to Northern literature. It has the naturalness of the spoken word, following blithely the quips and pranks of thought that give zest to conversation but are usually flattened out before they reach print. The result is a light whimsicality, a capriciousness which Hamsun cultivates with subtle and conscious art, until he attains a sparkle and vividness, an ease and flexibility never before known in the language of his

As the literary artist Hamsun gives us apples of gold in pictures of silver, and the metal for entirely of his own forging.—Hanna Astrup Larsen, in "Knut Hamsun."

THE decision recently rendered by the United States Supreme Court in a case appealed from the federal court of the State of Washington, seems finally and conclusively to establish the co-ordinated power of the states and the Government to punish violators of the law designed to enforce the Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution. The right of a state to prosecute and punish independently of the national Government, or concurrently with it, is defined and declared in unequivocal language. Against such a finding there has already been voiced a vehement and wordy protest, just as might have been expected. Again there is raised up that specter of the courts overriding and destroying the Constitution, the fundamental law of the land, even in the face of a decision which clearly sustains and intrenches the Constitution and the laws adopted for its enforcement.

State Enforcement

The contention is put forward that the assumed right of both the state and federal enforcement officers to prosecute those accused of an offense is in opposition to the declared fundamental of the law that a person shall not twice be placed in jeopardy for the same offense. But Chief Justice Taft, who wrote the decision in the case under discussion, made it quite clear, while recognizing and upholding this established rule, that the right reserved to both the national and state governments to concur in the matter of law enforcement did not preclude either of them from enacting and enforcing statutes providing separate penalties for violations. Thus it is explained, although such explanation might seem unnecessary, that the same overt act may constitute an offense against the peace and dignity of the United States, and at the same time an offense against the peace and dignity of a sovereign state. The statutes are separate and distinct, consequently the offenses must be regarded as distinct, even though punishment may involve double penalties. The offenses being separate, arraignment and conviction under the two jurisdictions do not constitute the forbidden double jeopardy for the same offense.

It should not be forgotten by those who are disposed to regard the decision under discussion as contrary to the established rule, that the proceedings sustained are in direct conformity with the provisions of the fundamental law in whose behalf they profess so great solicitude. The concurrent authority given is delegated and confirmed by the specific language of the Eighteenth Amendment. If it is sought to establish the contention that the decision just rendered, or the state and federal enactments which it construes, are unconstitutional, it will be necessary to show, first of all, that the Constitution is unconstitutional. Perhaps that will be the next step.

UNTIL quite recent years New England was looked upon as the place of origin of most of the cotton textiles and woolen fabrics, as well as of the factory-made boots and shoes which supplied the trade in the United States. Its prestige was gained in earlier times, when manufacturing was not attempted in the newer territories. Yankee ingenuity served to maintain and protect this industrial monopoly for many years, despite the handicap of distance from the ever-growing markets of the middle west, far west, and south. Those who endeavored to transplant factory processes into the Mississippi Valley and the Gulf country found the unskilled labor with which they were obliged to reckon a serious handicap. But this was offset in a considerable degree by the advantage gained in distribution, the ability to fill orders with little delay in transportation, the availability of raw material, and more gradually by the proved possibility of adapting the growing native and foreign populations to industrial tasks.

The result is that a great change has come about, almost without the realization of the average New Englander. St. Louis, unquestionably, is becoming the center of the shoe manufacturing industry in America. The south is becoming dotted with cotton mills. What was once a natural monopoly has been broken by processes so simple and so logical that they might have been foreseen. They could not possibly have been avoided. New England's machines and spindles are still busy, but this is due largely to a prestige long ago gained because of the known admirable or desirable qualities of the things produced, and because of the constantly increasing demand for the products offered for sale.

But the industrial west and south have been aided greatly by their freedom from the dictation of labor unionism and the ability of operatives to live comfortably on a much lower wage than that demanded in the east. This has brought about strong competition, the advantage to the western and southern manufacturers often being reflected directly in more attractive prices. No selling argument can convince a western or middle western retailer that he should pay a premium to organized labor, or that he should ask his customers to contribute to the support of some mill operative or factory hand who is assessed to pay union dues or the surcharges imposed by the New England butcher or grocer. His competitor in trade refuses to assume that responsibility, and he cannot afford to be undersold.

As in New England, so in the middle west, much of the shoe manufacturing is carried on in the smaller towns and cities. But in the western towns attractive inducements are offered to manufacturers in the way of free building sites, stated contributions to company payrolls, exemption from taxation for a term of years, and cooperation in home building. Added to all these things is the saving in wages made possible by cheaper fuel, lower rents, and an abundance of provisions at prices sometimes 50 per cent below those charged in the east. The economic combination is almost impervious; and it certainly indicates the eventual ascendancy of the newer section, especially in the two important industries named. New England may hope to maintain its industrial balance only by overcoming, by some process yet to be successfully applied, the natural economic disadvantage now existing. Probably the wages of eastern operatives are none too high to meet the excessive living costs which they must pay. But those costs are far too high. In no small degree union labor, by the monopoly it has formed in the building trades, is contributing to the problems of union labor employed in the producing industries. The processes of inflation are all quite pleasant and exciting until the inevitable saturation point is reached. Some one must always pay the fiddler.

THE Canadian public has lately been giving an increasing amount of attention to questions of banking and Canada's Credit Stability currency. To some extent this may be due to the fact that a revision of the Bank Act is expected at the approaching session of Parliament. This revision occurs every ten years. In a reference to it recently, Sir Vincent Meredith, president of the Bank of Montreal, spoke of the banking system of Canada as the product of long experience, and sounded a note of caution against radical changes.

At the same time, there can be nothing to apprehend

At the same time, there can be nothing to apprehensive from a more enlightened public opinion on questions relating to the control of financial credit. In the provinces where the Canadian farmers are organized, an awakened interest is especially marked. Some of the provinces have made considerable progress with rural credit projects through which financial credit facilities are being made available to producers in the agricultural communities. Co-operative credit societies are numerous and long established in the Province of Quebec. Ontario is laying the foundations of a provincial method to make fuller use of the Province's real credit on a co-operative basis. Manitoba has a rural credit system, and the movement is making progress in varying degrees in other provinces.

At a meeting of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, in Winnipeg recently, the representatives of the United Farmers throughout Canada passed a resolution recommending the appointment of a royal commission to report, among other things, on "the advisability of creating one or more banks in Canada combining the best features of the Commonwealth Bank of Australia and the Federal Reserve banks of the United States."

The general tendency is to study questions of finance and currency almost wholly from the point of view of increasing production, without providing for a more effective distribution of the goods when they are produced. Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, president of the Canadian Bankers Association, pointed out a year ago that Canadian manufacturing plants, employing 750,000 people, produced goods worth upwards of $4,000,000,000 a year. Canadian statistics show that all forms of production in the Dominion have a total money value of over $6,000,-000,000 annually. The Canadian people consume less than half of this amount annually, measured in terms of money. So long as this excess of production over consumption can be maintained there is no doubt about Canada's credit stability. As in other industrial countries, the problem before the Canadian people is rather one of more effectively distributing the abundance which they so easily produce and which in itself can be greatly increased without any serious strain on the Nation's annual holiday season comes again. How we all long to eliminate the leagues and miles that separate us from those who are near and dear in thought. Those distances mean little to us throughout the year. Engrossing occupations, work and study, leave little room for loneliness or even for too close introspection. But at times like the presentation.

tion. But at times like the present the old home ties seem inclined to tighten and draw us back to familiar scenes, familiar faces, and arms that are stretched out lovingly and longingly. Perhaps in the Maine woods, or perhaps on the broad prairies of Iowa or Nebraska, there is the original of a picture which persists in impressing itself upon the thought. It is a winter scene, in village or on farm, and into it there seems to come, perhaps by the unexplained method of the radio, the music of sleigh bells, punctuated and measured by the slower cadences of the notes from a distant church tower. There are cheery lights in the windows, in which candles burn from twilight until after the stockings are hung and the last restless little curly head has snuggled reluctantly into the pillow. The scene seems to draw very near. Our only regret is that it is not.

But there is pleasure and satisfaction in the thought that among those to whom the holiday means much, the day is much the same everywhere. Miles make no difference. Separation counts but little if our hearts and thoughts are in tune with the season. One who gives, and the day means little to those who do not, can give in one place as well as another of those things of which "the poor" stand most in need. These things we can all give, wherever we are when the holiday season comes upon us. This giving entails no expenditure of money and time in long journeys, no loss whatever in study or business. It only calls for the giving, of the things we have, willingly and generously. And the greatest of these possessions which we have the opportunity of sharing are happiness, contentment, brotherly love, and a considerate interest of the rights and wishes of others.

One would hardly know how to set about it to make a map or devise a time-table which would make such giving impossible. To those who seek the opportunity, the way is opened every day and every hour. The holiday season should not mark an anniversary set apart for systematic giving. It should only mark the point where we begin anew to give, at least in some measure, as liberally as we receive. The note of sincere gratitude, the song of the heart which responds to a generous impulse, make music just as sweet as that of the sleigh bells of which we all like to think. The great secret is in knowing, in learning, just how this music is produced.

Senator Pepper of Pennsylvania, who has not served so very long in the upper house of the United States Congress, is instant and earnest in his defense of the Senate as an institution. He has no hesitancy in declaring that many of the uncomplimentary things said about that body and about those who comprise its membership are the utterances of those who do not know what the Senate is and what it does. Now much of what Senator Pepper offers of what Senator Pepper offers is true beyond the shadow of a doubt. It is a too common custom to criticize adversely and to condemn what we do not understand. But this is not the time when a general denial or a plea of nolo contendere will avail. It is not sufficient, either, to cite past achievements or to refer to those whom history and tradition have agreed were great

But Senator Pepper quite wisely refrains from asking the critics of the Senate to accept without question his assurance that those in whose behalf he speaks are wise, patriotic, or eloquent. He invites inspection. So he proposes that Americans spend some of the time they have been accustomed to devote to fault-finding and destructive criticism to a study of governmental problems, with particular reference to the attitude of the United States Senate toward important issues. He advises those who are inclined to bemoan the decadence of the Senate to go to the primaries and exercise an effective influence in selecting senatorial candidates.

The Senator does not agree with the theory, entertained if not expressed, that a social, intellectual, or moral stage can be reached where those attaining it are exempted from the responsibilities of citizenship. He makes it quite clear that this responsibility can be discharged only at the polls, and with this no one will be inclined to disagree. Most of the shortcomings in legislative and administrative departments can be overcome at any time the people—and by this is meant the intelligent, representative people of the United States—are ready to speak effectively and decisively.

INEVITABLY, much talk and much discussion have been the result of Mrs. Swynnerton's election to associ-

Women's

ateship in the Royal Academy. It seems to have come as a great surprise, but the real surprise is that it did not come sooner. Two women were among the foundation members of the Royal Academy. Why, then, should women have been shut out from its exclusive precincts ever since? The National Academy in New York makes no distinction of sex in makes no distinction of sex in its elections. Women belong to the Société des Artistes Français and the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts in Paris. Only the Royal Academy, from its foundation until now, has seemed to think itself as essentially made for man alone as the clubs in Pall Mall.

There are arguments one can at least understand, if one does not agree with them, against the admission of women to the polls and to a share in the government of their country. But there is no possible reason for their exclusion on the grounds of sex from academies of arts or letters. The artist is judged solely and entirely by his or her work. Whether or no a woman's paintings or prints reach the same high level as a man's, the fact that she is a woman has nothing to do with it. She competes with him as an artist, and in her art only should her equality be questioned. One obstacle in her way has been that as yet she has never produced work that could entitle her to rank with the great masters. In the company of the multitude of men artists she has hitherto been second-rate. Angelica Kaufmann was recognized by her fellow-Academicians in her day, but the most gallant of them all would hardly have mentioned her in the same breath with Gainsborough or Reynolds. Her name has outlived the years, and not a few pilgrims used to visit Peter the Great's house, as long as it was left standing by the old Water Gate at the foot of Buckingham Street, mainly to see the ceiling she decorated. She is remembered; Mary Moser, the other foundation member, is not; but then, how many men who were painters and her contemporaries are? In Farington's delightful Diary, now running through The Morning Post, Associates and Academicians figure who have vanished as completely as the snows of yester-year, and, indeed, who today knew the name of Farington before The Morning Post began to publish his Diary? No woman has ever been the leader or even in the van of any important secession or movement in art. By her own work, and not by the jealousy or brutality of man, she has occupied her secondary place as artist.

In that place, however, she often ranks high, oftener in the present than the past. Women are as prominent as men in today's exhibitions and, at their best, do not reveal their sex in their work. If no name were signed on the canvas or printed in the catalogue, a woman's sex would not always betray her. When it does, then her inferiority as artist also is revealed and she deserves to remain without the gate. When, however, her sex is lost in her art, it is nonsense to insist upon keeping her there—the pariah of art. In electing Mrs. Swynnerton, London follows the example of Paris and New York. It is the first step that costs, and no doubt other accomplished women will soon keep her company in the academic fold. What the effect will be upon the Academy, whether for good or for ill, the next generation will be best able to judge.

Editorial Notes

Now that steps have been taken definitely to release China from Japanese control, even though in some respects it has not been found possible completely to work out the plans in every detail, the outlook for the former country's future appears full of promise. One of the problems which remains to be solved is the question of the Japanese residents in Shantung. Of these there are more than 30,000, mainly located in Tsingtao, but with a strong nucleus too at Tsinan, the provincial capital, from which centers they control an overwhelining share of the local trade. This in the past has rather more than portended an economic conquest, but indications point to the fact that the Japanese Government recognizes that it owes China restitution in the economic field as well as in those merely political and military. It appears, that is to say, to be entirely conscious that most of the ill-feeling that has arisen through the Yellow Republic has sprung from a sense of economic aggression, and steps to the end of placing Japanese business on a footing exactly level with that of other foreign enterprise already have been taken. Nothing could be in more pleasant keeping with the conciliatory sense which the Kato Ministry has shown throughout these negotiationsfor the really big, encouraging phase of it all is that Japan proves itself intent not only upon living up, in spirit as well as letter, to the treaties it entered into at Washington, but also upon gaining China's good will.

RECENTLY aroused interest which British exporters have shown in Icelandic trade, largely as a reaction from the war period, has led to plans for a direct steamship line between Reykjavik (Smoky Bay) in Iceland, and Liverpool, it being remembered that Iceland is about 150 miles nearer Great Britain than it is to Norway. A British-Icelandic commercial club has recently been opened in Reykjavik and there has actually been some discussion of establishing a general British consulate to look after the interests of British trade. In view of the fact that this aroused interest appears to threaten the whole Scandinavian influence on the island, it is not a matter of wonder that the Scandinavian tradesmen regard it with a considerable measure of real alarm. After all, however, there is little reason for surprise regarding it, because, in the last analysis, once antificial restrictions are removed international business practically always tends to follow geographical lines, and Great Britain is actually a more direct half-way station between Iceland and the European market than either Norway or Den-

RECENT comment made by Capt. W. H. Stayton, founder and executive head of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, in regard to the prohibition situation in the United States and President Harding's message to Congress, provides an excellent example of seeing what one wants to see and nothing else, For instance, Captain Stayton declared in a published statement:

It is . . . clear that Mr. Harding indicated the possibility as well as the unquestioned right of Congress to modify the present federal enforcement legislation. . . There has been an attention in the minds of the people on the question of prohibition enforcement methods. The last test at the poils gave it unmistakable proof.

Fortunately, there is little to apprehend from distortions of the true facts in a case. Facts tell a clearer story than fiction every time, and the facts in this instance warrant the assertion that the prohibition sentiment in America is growing steadily but surely and that it certainly will prevail.

SEVERAL notable features marked the closing sessions in Washington of the lecturers' conference on public opinion and world peace, held under the auspices of the International Lyceum and Chautauqua Association. Not the least of these was the presentation of the Near East situation by Dr. Herbert Adams Gibbons, who argued that the time had come for the United States to assert its moral leadership of the world. Dr. Gibbons' intimate knowledge of the status of affairs in Europe renders his opinion especially worthy of consideration, because he has had opportunities for observation impossible to the ordinary individual. From every angle America is being urged to recognize the fact that it is being called to a larger destiny than it has known before, and indications point more clearly day by day to the fact that it is no longer going to hesitate about accepting its mission for the good of humanity.

Many things happen in the comparatively short space of a hundred years, and people like to feel that a moral advance has been made in the past century. An excerpt from a London journal of 1822 strongly points to this conclusion. It reads:

A fellow at Nottingham, wearing His Majesty's uniform, on Saturday hast delivered his wife (a decent looking woman), with a halter round her arm, to a man dressed in a smock frock, who had previously agreed to give the vendor a sum of 5s. for his goods, and paid the purchase money on delivery. The transaction took place in the open marketplace of that town. The magistrates have the power to stop this kind of nuisance; it is an offence for which any person may be held to Truly the world has progressed.

If MEN could see themselves as others see them such an exhibition as that recently witnessed when Lady Astor was heckled and howled down at the conference of the National Unionist Association, her own party meeting, in London, would surely never occur. Such scenes show perforce, however, that men are indeed nought but "children of a larger growth."

THERE is something distinctly heartening in the fact that the Union Jack was waved in the streets of Dublin the other day by members of the crowds seeing off the last of the British troops from Free State territory. It was indicative of a larger vision gained and a promise of still better things to come.
